

Volume Zero

Box in Box

July 3, 2025

Architecture

BOX IN BOX

BY GENRE OF DESIGN

The house gets its name- 'Box in Box' from the way it was imagined.

The concept was to create a bold identity- cubes stacked, pushed, and pulled, forming a contemporary massing that sparked curiosity from every angle. This "form first" approach guided the entire layout, with spaces then introduced within its geometry.

The house gets its name- 'Box in Box' from the way it was imagined. Set on a compact L-shaped plot of 3100 sq. ft. in Jodhpur, Box in Box is a three-storey residence designed for a joint family of two brothers and their extended family. With a requirement for 7-8 rooms, the site posed a significant challenge in terms of fitting the program while maintaining a sense of openness and connection to greens and daylight. The design flips the conventional approach, instead of function dictating form, the form was imagined first.

The concept was to create a bold identity- cubes stacked, pushed, and pulled, forming a contemporary massing that sparked curiosity from every angle. This "form first" approach guided the entire layout, with spaces then introduced within its geometry. Solid zones housed utilities like toilets, while open spaces aligned with large fenestrations for light and air. The facade is intentionally minimal, clad in Gwalior and Kandla grey stone, softened by a perforated aluminium jali screen that visually breaks the verticality and brings proportion. The neutral palette- off-whites, warm browns, greys, sets a calm tone both outside and within.

